Growth" and its repercussions - in economic terms as well as in relation to the number of inhabitants, the impact on housing, land consumption, mobility, biodiversity and the repercussions on future generations - is one of the most central issues for the development of our country. The question is how to manage this situation.

The aim of the evening is to provide a more detailed insight into the concrete positions of the various political parties on this key challenge. This will also be done in the context of the strategies developed during the last legislative period, for example in the areas of national planning, climate protection and the analysis of the financing of the pension system.

Growth" and its repercussions - in economic terms as well as in relation to the number of inhabitants, the impact on housing, land consumption, mobility, biodiversity and the repercussions on future generations - is one of the most central issues for the development of our country. The question is how to manage this situation.

The aim of the evening is to provide a more detailed insight into the concrete positions of the various political parties on this key challenge. Questions such as the following will be addressed:

- Do we need continued economic growth? Is it compatible with biodiversity and climate protection objectives? Is it linked to greater social justice?
- Would it make sense to make our social system less dependent on growth, and how might that work?
- How would our economy be able to develop without growth constraints?
- How should "prosperity - well being" be defined today?
- What role can spatial planning play - in collaboration with other ministries and local authorities in responding to the enormous challenges of mobility, housing construction, biodiversity and climate protection? How should cooperation with border regions be developed?
